(Kyle Slabb – Cultural Leader, Fingal NSW)

For me personally, I've got a white grandparents on one side. I've got one grandfather who was half Aboriginal half Chinese. So big mixture. And what I can see of my family you know. A lot of people have that kind of mixed lines. And to understand and to feel that we're who we are because we're meant to be who we are. And all of that makes us who we are is an important idiom.

I've met pretty young boys and young fellas that are mixed blood lines and struggling with their identity. And especially in a Christian, Aboriginal Christian and things like that because they have 2 different ways. And they have 2 different understanding and perspective. And sometimes they don't know which way is what.
